night. Fourteen men participated, seven on each side. The victims were seven emoloyes of the Southern Pacific, rettening from the work on the west side of the lake. They were stopped by seven men, four of whom held a gun in each hand. The three others attended to the job of fifling the pockets. After the valuables had been secured the victims were marched to an empty box car and forced to get in. The robbers pulled the door shut and locked it. It was an hour before the imprisoned men made themselves heard and were released.

The affair happened in the Southern Pacific vards. The victims included Charles Williamson, chief dispatcher at Promontory Point. Thomas Handley, a trainmaster; L. A. Kennedy, "Dad" Pettengill and two others. They had just come in from the other side of the lake and were trudging along the track about 10.30 o'clock on their way uptown, when they were accosted by the holdups. The robbers are described as all young men, each having a handkerchief over the lower part of his face as a mask. The seven victims were made to hold up their hands and march over to the rear of Scowcroft's warehouse. There they were lined up against the wall, hands in the it and noses against the bricks. A listol muzzle was against the bricks. A listol muzzle was against the back of ach one. The highwaymen secured six atches, several pocket knives and about 100 in cash. Thomas Handley was the eaviest loser, having $41 in his pocket. The police made a thorough search of he railroad yards, but at midnight no rrests had been made.
